LPG solutions provider SUPERGAS, backed by global energy major SHV Energy, has announced an investment of ₹350 crore over five years to strengthen its infrastructure and distribution network across India, particularly in Assam and the Northeast. Marking 30 years of operations in India, the company aims to achieve sustained double-digit growth and double its annual sales volume during this period.

As part of the expansion, ₹60 crore will be invested over the next two years to establish new LPG filling plants in West Bengal and Punjab. The company will also upgrade and revalidate an existing storage tank at its Tuticorin Terminal, raising its usable storage capacity to 38,000 metric tonnes.
